

Name That WIDGET

Enter our contest
and win $100!

You might not think, from a quick look, that this photo shows something useful to electronics engineers. You might even think you're looking at something from science fiction. The picture does show something useful, however, and we'll identify it in a future issue.

For now, though, wouldn't you like to win $100 just by thinking about what this nifty item could be? You can, if you come up with the cleverest name for it or description of it in EDN's Name That Widget contest. We'll publish the winning contest entry and some of the best runner-up entries in a future issue of EDN. We'll also identify the widget's real purpose and tell you how to contact the manufacturer for more information about it. (In the meantime, we beg the manufacturer for patience and a sense of humor.)

To enter our Name That Widget contest, just send us a name for the widget or a description of the widget's purpose. Send your entry or entries (multiple entries OK), along with the issue date, by e-mail (widget@edn.cahners.com), by fax (Wallace P Widget, 1-617-558-4470), or by snail mail (Wallace P Widget, EDN Magazine, 275 Washington Street, Newton, MA 02458).

Look for a new Name That Widget contest in every issue. Our next issue will also contain the results of our August 3 contest.
