

The Advanced Telecom Computing Architecture specifies a modular approach to building complex communications equipment, housed in enclosures, called shelves, such as this one. Variations on this shelf include the number of slots, the back-plane type, cooling schemes, power-supply capacity, module orientation, rack height, and compliance with various standards (courtesy PICMG).

