

Figure 10 Designers built a two-layer pc board so that the input capacitor and both switches are over an island in the ground plane. Although the loop area by the red and blue currents is large, the difference between the two loops is small. The small change in loop area means a small change in magnetic flux and a correspondingly small ground bounce.