

Differing perspectives have Mobile WiMax serving as the 4G successor to today's 3G cellular networks or as a symbiotic technology to cellular systems, with deployment across metropolitan areas but not along roadways between cities.