

Figure 1 The system designer documents how the application uses power through power, or “discharge,” curves. In this example of a battery pack for a screwdriver with a set screw, high current spikes correspond with cutting or drilling events. These events change depending on the duration of the spike and the material the drill is cutting.
