

Figure 6 For greater accuracy, you can add a low-drift external reference. Periodically measuring the LT1461's output and using this information to adjust the cell measurements, along with an initial calibration, reduces the errors to 0.03%, which is the noise floor of the ADC, over a  $-20$  to  $+70^{\circ}\text{C}$  window.